SAFE MOTHERHOOD

There are quite a number of things to consider when dealing with safe motherhood. One of them is child spacing. The health of both the mother and the child is put at risk if the mother becomes pregnant a few months after the birth of the lactating child. The mother needs to be given ample time to lactate her child before another follows. Therefore, men should learn to be considerate and human enough when it comes to safe motherhood.

Again, expectant mothers need to be escorted by their spouses to antenatal clinics for check-ups by professional medical personnel. Messages relayed there and picked by both husband and wife ensure that the expectant mother and the unborn baby are safe. Relying on traditional practices is dangerous because traditional birth attendants usually just speculate about the safety of expectant mothers. It is therefore, imperative that antenatal and postnatal check-ups be done at health centres.
